Pictured are three landmarks that help define Maricopa. The California Zephyr ran the Burlington Northern route starting in the 1940s and retired in 1970. The last of three massive water towers that marked the Maricopa area on the railroad in the 1880s still towers 60 feet over the community. Motorists on SR347 are often treated to the sight of wild horses roaming the desert north of the city.

Juxtaposing transportation past and present, Union Pacific’s historic Big Boy steam locomotive No. 4014, the only one operating in the world, passed through town under the just-opened overpass in 2019. Maricopa’s history is intertwined with the railroad, and dozens of trains still pass through town daily today.
